Monthly commentary

In March, investor attention focused on the United States, where the Trump administration was increasingly threatening to impose tariffs on its trading partners. The substance and form of these announcements led to a further deterioration in economic confidence, and fears of recession in the United States and the rest of the world grew. Among the good news, Germany confirmed at the start of the month its intention to use its budgetary surpluses to boost its economy, while the US job market continues to show resilience in the face of economic fears and layoffs in the public sector.

Equity markets were hit by rising uncertainty and accelerated downwards over the period (MSCI World TR €h: -5.0%), with US indices and growth stocks once again underperforming (S&P 500 TR USD: -5.6%; Nasdaq 100 TR USD: -7.6%). The rest of the international markets also underperformed (Euro Stoxx 50 TR EUR: -3.8%; Nikkei 225 TR in JPY: -3.3%), with the exception of emerging markets (MSCI Emerging Markets TR USD: +0.3%), which were helped by the fall in the dollar (Bloomberg Dollar Index: -3.2%).

Despite the risk aversion, sovereign bonds failed to act as a diversifier (Bloomberg Global Aggregate Treasuries €h: -0.6%), partly due to the impact of the German support plan on eurozone rates (Germany 10Y: +33 bps over the period), but also to inflationary fears in the United States, which exerted upward pressure on rates (US 10Y stable over the period).

In this environment, the YCAP Tactical Investment fund fell by -4.0% and underperformed its benchmark* (-3.0%) due to the fund's greater exposure to the equity markets and a negative selection effect on the equity bucket. Over the period, average exposure to equities was 60% (compared with 62% in February), while interest-rate sensitivity fell to an average of 2.9 in March compared with 3.2 in February.
