Monthly commentary

July proved to be a relatively quiet month on the macroeconomic front, with figures broadly in line with expectations and therefore having minor impact on markets. Investors' attention was hence focused on corporate earnings and progress in trade negotiations between the US and its trading partners. On this front, numerous agreements were signed at the end of the period, including two major deals with Japan and the European Union.

Second-quarter earnings were generally reassuring in the United States (with around two-thirds of companies having reported) but still mixed in Europe. According to FactSet, US companies delivered annual earnings growth of over +10% for the third consecutive quarter, exceeding expectations of around +5%. Although cautious due to the lack of visibility on tariffs, executives' statements are also proving more optimistic than expected, prompting analysts to revise forecasts upward for the coming quarters. In Europe, the main negative point is the 3% decline in sales (partly due to the stronger euro), but this is offset by a return to earnings growth after two quarters of falling benefits.

Equity markets gained +1.9% over the month (MSCI World TR €h). Disparities were mainly observed at sector and thematic levels, with artificial intelligence stocks once again outperforming, while the healthcare sector declined under the pressure from tariff threats and US efforts to regulate drug prices. On the bond markets, sovereign yields rose (US 10-year: +15 bp; Germany 10-year: +9 bp), leading the Bloomberg Global Aggregate Developed Markets TR €h index to fall by -0.4% over the period.

In this environment, the YCAP Tactical Investment fund gained +0.6%, underperforming its benchmark index (+0.9%). Greater exposure to equities (65% on average in July) was offset by a negative selection effect linked to the fund's lower exposure to the semi-conductor sector. Interest-rate sensitivity was raised over the period (3.1 on average in July vs. 2.5 in May).
