Monthly commentary

In June, markets were driven by the signing of a memorandum of understanding between the United States and Iran, and by the first press conference of the new Chairman of the US Federal Reserve, Kevin Warsh. Regarding the memorandum of understanding, whilst it does not address most of the sensitive issues (most notably the question of nuclear matters), it has succeeded in unblocking shipping through the Strait of Hormuz, which has been gradually resuming since 18 June. This should help ease inflationary pressures and mitigate the risk of monetary tightening, particularly in Europe where the ECB had already been forced to a hike of +25 bps and where investors had been pricing in up to two more hikes prior to the reopening of the Strait. In the United States, K. Warsh's first press conference confirmed his intention to thoroughly overhaul the conduct of monetary policy (in particular with regard to "forward guidance"), whilst the institution's economic projections confirmed the risk of a rate hike this year.

Despite this improvement in the geopolitical backdrop, equity markets edged lower over the month (MSCI World TR €h: -0.2%), dragged down by sharp falls in several of the market's heavyweights. Renewed scepticism over the returns on massive investments in computing infrastructure took its toll on some of the sector's biggest names (NVIDIA: -5%; Alphabet: -6%; Meta: -11%; Amazon: -11%; and Microsoft: -17%). This primarily benefited the most defensive sectors (MSCI World Health Care TR USD: +5%; MSCI World Utilities: +2%) as well as European markets (Euro Stoxx 50 TR: +4.7%), which were further supported by the reopening of Hormuz. Movements were also divergent in bond markets, with yields falling in Europe (Germany 10-year: -8 bps) and rising in the United States (2-year: +17 bps; 10-year: +3 bps) in the face of the risk of a Fed rate hike. Overall, the Bloomberg Global Aggregate TR €h index advanced by +0.3% in June.

Over the period, the YCAP Tactical Investment fund remained stable, underperforming its benchmark* (+0.6%), due to its exposure to French small-cap stocks (3% of the portfolio), which significantly underperformed European markets (CAC Small: -6.2%), and further underperformance from software publishers. Over the period, equity exposure was slightly increased (52% on average over the month), whilst interest rate sensitivity remained stable at 2.5.
