Monthly commentary

The situation in the Strait of Hormuz continued to deteriorate throughout August, resulting in a further rise in global energy prices. This contributed to increased uncertainty surrounding monetary policy, as central bankers are still forced to adopt restrictive stances even though core inflation remains contained and growth dynamics fragile. In the United States, macroeconomic releases highlighted a deterioration in the labour market and a marked slowdown in consumption, while PMI indices, particularly in the services sector, sent an optimistic signal. In Europe, the macroeconomic rebound appears to be taking hold following the strong second-quarter growth figures, as reflected by the eurozone PMI indices, which have rebounded sharply since the end of May. The notable exception to this trend is France, where growth figures were revised downwards and business surveys continue to deteriorate.

Equity markets chose to set aside these uncertainties and focus on positive macroeconomic signals as well as the latest earnings releases, which were very strong on both sides of the Atlantic. The MSCI World Index therefore rose by +2.3% over the period (euro hedged), with limited differences across regions or investment styles. Sector disparities, however, remained significant, with the sectors most sensitive to interest rates underperforming (notably healthcare and utilities), and strong outperformance from the technology complex and stocks linked to energy and mining commodities. In bond markets, yields were volatile over the period and ended higher in Europe, with 10-year German and French yields rising by +12 bps and +18 bps respectively, but were relatively unchanged in the United States, where 10-year yields increased by +2 bps. Corporate bonds outperformed, thanks to their higher carry and a further narrowing of their risk premiums. Overall, the Bloomberg Global Aggregate TR € hedged index was flat over the month.

Over the period, the YCAP Tactical Investment fund rose by +1.1%, compared with a +1.4% increase for its benchmark*. Equity exposure increased during the month, averaging 60% versus 52% in July, while interest-rate sensitivity remained stable at approximately 3.2.
