Monthly commentary

September was characterised by a global environment of persistent inflationary pressures and robust growth. In the United States, job creation rebounded significantly after three months of deceleration, while PMI indices continued to recover, reaching their highest level in more than three years. Against this backdrop, the Federal Reserve proceeded with its first rate hike since K. Warsh took office as its new governor, while also signaling one further hike before year-end. Economic activity also surprised positively in Europe, with PMI indices likewise reaching their highest level in three years, while inflation continued to accelerate, reaching 3.8% in the eurozone. This prompted the ECB to raise rates by 25 bps for the second time this year. At the same time, political and fiscal uncertainties continued to increase in France, triggering a massive sell-off in sovereign debt. The yield spread between French OATs and German Bunds therefore widened by 42 bps to reach 127 bps, its highest level since the sovereign debt crisis in 2012.

In this global reflationary environment, sovereign yields rose sharply, with 10-year US and German yields increasing by 53 bps and 26 bps, respectively. In credit markets, risk premiums widened, by approximately 10 bps for EUR- and USD-denominated Investment Grade debt, and by 40 bps and 53 bps, respectively, for High Yield debt (as measured by the iTraxx indices for EUR-denominated securities and the CDX indices for USD-denominated securities). As a result of these movements, the Bloomberg Global Aggregate € hedged index fell by -1.8% over the month. Equity markets once again proved resilient in the face of this bond market stress, with the MSCI World TR € hedged index declining by -1.2%. However, this figure masks performance that was once again highly concentrated in the AI theme, with the technology sector, as measured by the MSCI World Information Technology TR USD index, rising by +4.4%, while most other sectors posted declines between -4% and -6%.

Over the period, the YCAP Tactical Investment fund declined by -2.3%, compared with a -1.6% decline in its benchmark*. Equity exposure decreased slightly in September, averaging 57% versus 60% in August. Average interest-rate sensitivity also declined, to 3.0 versus 3.2 in August.

*Composite index: 50% MSCI World Selection EUR hedged + 50% Barclays Global Aggregate Developed Markets EUR hedged, daily rebalancing.
